This website is being updated daily, and you are encouraged to bookmark this page and visit it for answers to many of your questions related to this crisis. If California renters are not able to pay rent due to financial or medical circumstances caused by the coronavirus pandemic, they are entitled to a delay of an eviction through May 31. To qualify, renters need to prove they've been laid-off, lost their job or hours at work because of COVID-19. Those who have had to care of children whose schools are closed or family members with COVID-19, also qualify. Renters must notify their landlords in writing no later than seven days after their rent is due, so by April 8 or May 8, to communicate they're unable to pay. Now come June 1, tenants could be evicted if they didn't pay rent in April or May.	3/21/20

All Regions	National Council for Behavioral Health	Corona virus resource directory and tools	For more than 50 years, we have been working to promote health and wellness among our staff, stakeholders, members and the communities they support. With recent news of the novel coronavirus (COVID-19) inviting a heightened sense of uncertainty and apprehension, that commitment has never been stronger. In this time of confusion, there is hope. And there is help. You are not alone. There are 3,325 member organizations that, like you, are working to keep their doors open, their staff safe and their communities healthy. To help you navigate this rapidly evolving situation, we are building a coronavirus resource directory and sharing tools and information to inform you every step of the way.	4/10/20
All Regions	Mental Health America	Mental health support for the effects of COVID-19	As the number of cases of COVID-19 increase, so does the associated anxiety. For the general public, the mental health effects of COVID-19 are as important to address as are the physical health effects. And for the one in five who already have mental health conditions – or the one in two who are at risk of developing them – we need to take personal, professional, and policy measures now to address them. To aid individuals and communities during this time, MHA has compiled a range of resources and information.	4/10/20

All Regions	APPS to Help w/Mental Health: Common Sense Media	Resources to support Teens in crisis during COVID-19	Obviously, for tweens and teens in crisis, there's no substitute for face-to-face intervention and professional help. However, since phones are tools most teens use, they can offer timely resources and help for those who need it. Aside from general health apps, these tools focus specifically on coping with anxiety, depression, and specific difficult circumstances via meditation, connection, and other techniques. While some are focused on an individual's experience, others offer chat and the option to find a therapist. Especially when used in conjunction with other approaches, these apps might offer teens a little peace of mind.	5/29/20

All Regions	The Center for Child Welfare Trauma-Informed Policies, Programs, and Practices (TIPs Center)	Training series to support the infusion of trauma-informed skills in child welfare	The third edition of the CWTTT was updated and released in March 2020 by the TIPs Center in collaboration with the National Child Traumatic Stress Network (NCTSN). The CWTTT is a training series designed to support the infusion of trauma-informed knowledge and skills into child welfare organizational cultures, at all levels and among all roles, resulting in positive sustainable changes in the policies, programs, and practices which lead to better outcomes for children and families served by these systems. It is a publicly available and can be downloaded for free. In addition to the training curricula, there is also a Tips for Facilitators and an Implementation Guide to support systems and facilitator's in implementing and delivering the CWTTT.	6/15/20
All Regions	JSI RESOURCES: PUBLICATIONS	Tools to help potential partners understand the connection between DV and focus.	The connection between domestic violence (DV), social determinants of health, and other pressing issues may not always be clear to potential partners who do not work in the DV/trauma prevention fields. JSI developed a set of tools for domestic violence service providers—in the form of stories—to address this gap. The first three stories depict the connection between DV and a key social issue (housing instability, economic insecurity, or childhood adversity). The fourth story makes the case for health care providers to employ a universal education approach to prevent and respond to domestic violence. These tools have been designed to help potential partners, collaboratives, and funders to better understand the connection between DV and their focus area, and to motivate them to take action through partnership. Each tool is meant to be downloaded and customized with DV providers' organizational information.	6/15/20

All Regions	Early Childhood Knowledge and Learning Center	Resources to help caregivers and families understand signs and dangers fo stress in young children	Ongoing research shows that adversity and high levels of stress in early childhood can have a negative impact on a person's life. Stress can affect a child's health, behavior, and ability to learn. However, adults can encourage resilience in young children and in themselves. Resilience is the ability to cope with the stress caused by challenging situations. Find resources below that can help caregivers and families understand the signs and dangers of stress in young children. Learn about strategies to promote resilience and support positive outcomes.	6/17/20

All Regions	Scholastic	Workbook of shared activities that lead to greater resilience	This is a stressful time for families and children. We want to give comforting answers, yet we are looking for comfort ourselves. At a time when we all need hugs and closeness, we are asked to maintain distance. We've designed this workbook to be used flexibly so you can bridge the gaps created by our changing circumstances. Share it with your child for activities and as a conversational tool. You can also encourage an older child to work with a younger sibling, or go to a calming corner and reflect independently. We believe that your family will form bonds through these shared activities that lead to greater resilience. And we hope that the emotional resources your children develop will serve them well in this time of crisis, and in months and years ahead.	7/14/20

All Regions	State of California	Stress busting playbook that will help you understand what to look oru for and what you can do to protect your families health	Many of us are feeling a lot of stress right now. Even for adults, it can be tough to recognize that what we feel as irritability, difficulty focusing, insomnia or changes in appetite can actually be signs that are bodies are feeling the effects of stress. For kids, no matter the age, their brains and bodies are even more vulnerable to the harmful effects of stress than adults, and most often, they aren't able to recognize or verbalize it. Stress in kids may show up differently than our stress as adults does. This Stress-Busting Playbook can help you understand what to look out for and what you can do to protect your family's health.	7/22/20

All Regions	No Kid Hungry	Information about how to access food resources please Text 'Food' to 877-877	In addition to USDA's Meal For Kids online mapping tool, No Kid Hungry offers a national texting service that allows parents or students to find feeding sites near them by text. How it works: Text 'FOOD' to 877-877 or 'COMIDA' to 877-877 for information in Spanish, User receives text back prompting them to enter a street address, city and state and/or zip code for their desired location. While the service is able to return results for inputs that include only city and state and/or zip code, including a full street address will return results that are more accurate, The service then texts back information about nearby meal sites, or information about how to access other food resources if no sites are operating in the vicinity. All regions	Common Sense Education	Resources for learning experiences through virtual field trips	Resources: Field trips are informal learning experiences that get students out into the world, exploring the world and students' interests. Trips to museums, parks, historical sites, and more show students that learning (and life) happens outside the classroom, too. During field trips, students discover new things and learn in authentic environments, placing classroom content into new contexts. Unfortunately, for many schools and students, field trips are rare (if they happen at all). Thankfully, there are great games, apps, and websites that can bring places and experiences fostered by field trips to the classroom. While not an outright replacement, these field trip tools can offer inspiring and intriguing experiences for students.	4/14/20
