Instruction/Motivation

Students will sing along to two favorite preschool songs. They will learn about how the places where the songs were written helped the songs to be created.

Procedure

1. Play Baby Shark two times through, singing along with the student. Ask them what images they see repeatedly in the video.

2. Then play Coming Round The Mountain two times through, again singing along with the student. Again, ask them what images they see repeatedly in the video.
3. Show them the map, and where South Korea is. Indicate how the country is small and surrounded by the ocean. It relies heavily on seafood and other things from the sea including sharks. That is how the shark came to be featured in the song that the South Korean musicians created.
4. Then, show them the map of the United States and reference the Western states. This folk song was created during the time that the western half of the United States was being settled (late 1800s). The American musicians who wrote it were referring to a supply train arriving with goods for people living in the West.
5. Sing each song one more time through, with the student.

Closure/Reflection

- Ask the student which song was about a country surrounded by the ocean? Ask them what the name of the country is?
- Ask the student which song talked about a train coming in? Ask them what the name of the country is?

Evaluation

- Did the student sing each song repeatedly and gain a feel for the words/lyrics?
- Were they able to understand that the songs were different based on where they came from?
